

Lord and Lady Tweedsmuir

In February 1940 all Canada mourned the passing of Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada. He had undergone a third operation to save his life but this was of no avail.

Canada was infinitely poorer through the death of the Governor-General, Lord Tweedsmuir. Coming just a few years before to this dominion as the King's representative, he quickly won the hearts of the people by his deep understanding, broad vision, unflinching devotion to duty and his great heartedness. He was essentially a man of character, which was fashioned in the Scottish manse and reinforced in many spheres of the school of life. A soldier, statesman, but most of all a man of letters, he viewed life from the widest human horizons and gave to his adopted country the full value of his wealth of experience. It was singular, but appropriate, in estimating his contribution to the life of Canada in the all-too brief period he
